

HOPELESS LOVERS ATTEMPT SUICIDE BY GAS AND DRUG

Angelo Ciliotta and Maria Grandi First Go to River But Are Afraid.

GAS SEEMS TOO SLOW.

Then Maria Writes Letter to Husband While Angelo Goes for the Poison.

Love meant only tragedy for Angelo Ciliotta and Maria Grandi, who were taken to-day from their home at No. 30 East One Hundred and Fifth street to the Harlem Hospital in danger of death from taking bichloride of mercury.

Maria Grandi is the wife of John Grandi, and Angelo Ciliotta, who boarded with the Grandis since he came here from Naples several years ago, has a young wife in the old country.

Ciliotta did not leave home this morning to take up his accustomed work as a carpenter. He breakfasted with the Grandis. When John Grandi left the house Ciliotta shook him warmly by the hand and said that he would probably have to go away for a long time. Mrs. Grandi did not bid her husband goodbye. When he left her she was standing by the window weeping.

She Proposed Suicide. When John Grandi had left the little flat his wife turned to Angelo and said: "Let us die. Our love is hopeless."

Angelo agreed and suggested that they try the river. They walked to the nearest East River pier. Silently they stood and looked at the swirling waters. They shuddered and were afraid.

They returned to the flat, closed up one of the rooms and turned on the gas. They sat hand in hand waiting for death, but when they began to choke from the fumes they could not bear the slow agony. Angelo suggested poison then and a farewell letter. He went out and bought a bottle of bichloride of mercury and Maria Grandi sat down and wrote the letter.

She told of the walk down to the river and of the slow agony of the gas. Then she added:

"But we cannot live in this torture any longer and Angelo has gone for poison."

Each Drinks Poison. They measured an equal portion of the poison in two glasses and drank it. Again death cheated them—falling to the floor as they wished. Neighbors heard their groans and Dr. Pietro Pelligrini of No. 30 East One Hundred and Fifth street, was called in.

The man and woman were partly conscious and the physician managed to remove some of the poison. Then he called an ambulance and the hopeless lovers were taken to the Harlem Hospital. It is said they will probably die.

Killed on Pennsylvania Track. A Pennsylvania train, east-bound, ran down and killed Mariette Crenshaw, a truckwalker, at Marston, early to-day. His body was taken to his home at No. 120 Seventh avenue, this city.

TAKES THIEF'S HAT TO POLICE AFTER HOLD-UP AT NOON

Mr. Rosen Says He Fought Footpads All Over Street and No Bluecoat Showed Up.

Max Rosen, frantic with fright and anger, ran into the Liberty avenue station in East New York at noon to-day and slammed an smashed brown derby hat on the desk in front of the lieutenant; then he turned about and showed a deep cut on the back of his head and a jagged hole in the brim of his own black derby.

"See what I got!" shouted Mr. Rosen, who keeps a musical instrument store at No. 287 Atlantic avenue and lives three blocks away, at No. 1422 Harbor street. "This is what comes to me for being such a sucker as to live in Williamsburg. I am leaving my store to go home for lunch. In my pocket I have $30, an always, from my collection of instruments. On my fingers I have these rings."

Mr. Rosen showed two diamonds on his fingers, worth at least $500. "It is broad daylight," he goes on. "Eleven o'clock in the morning. I go through Atlantic avenue and come to Herkimer street. Two men walk up close behind me. There are few houses there. I don't like that they walk so close."

Fight All Over Street. "I cross the street. The men cross. I walk fast. They walk fast. I run and something hits the edge of my hat, near my ear, and I fall down and they are on top of me. I shout for police. I yell like a crazy man. We fight all over the street. One of them is a little man, and I keep him between my feet."

me and the big one. I keep up a better all the time. They are scared and run away. Until they are out of my sight I yell for police.

"Then I start here right away to bring this brown hat one of them dropped. All the way I am looking for a policeman. You are the first one I have seen yet."

"I will put men on the case," said the lieutenant. "Thank you for the hat."

"What good does that do my poor head?" ask Mr. Rosen, as he went on his way to lunch.

BANKERS WILL ASK MAYOR TO RESTORE SPECIAL POLICE

Protest Against Cropsy's Order Taking Badges From Officers Employed in Big Institutions.

The bankers of the city are preparing a vigorous protest to Mayor Gagner against the action of Police Commissioner Cropsy in revoking the police power granted to special officers employed by the banks.

For a great many years they have enjoyed this privilege of having special policemen in the banks at all hours. Each of the Wall street institutions employ from two to eight special policemen, and as a rule they are intelligent and courteous men. The banks will continue to employ these men, but they have been forced to give up their shields and no longer have police power.

A plan is on foot now to hold a meeting of bank officials and frame a form of protest and appoint a committee to call on the Mayor and ask that Commissioner Cropsy's order be rescinded.
